A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Dear Friends,

Having finished my second academic year as the eighth president of Old Dominion University, I welcome this chance to share some uplifting thoughts with you. For sure, being the president of Old Dominion University is an amazing experience, filled with challenge and opportunity. Coming into my presidency in the midst of our nationwide economic crisis, I have found that it's not the challenge, as much as the opportunity, that confounds. How do we take this moment, navigate through the chaos and emerge better than ever?

ODU has an abundance of riches. On campus, we have an award-winning teaching faculty, renowned researchers, a talented and dedicated staff, a multicultural student body of almost 24,000, competitive academic programs, leading-edge technology and an expanding landscape. Within the community, we have partnerships with business, industry, the military, our ports, state and local government, and other institutions. And we have you, an extraordinary cadre of supporters who have stood with us through the hard times and who will be with us when this, too, passes.

From the ashes of our nation's economic house built with flimsy material, we have to find our own ways to restructure ourselves. These are the opportunities I believe ODU must seize:

- We must focus. The talent and expertise at ODU lead us to think we can be all things to all people, but even if we could, we shouldn't. Our 2010-2014 Strategic Plan focuses on six priorities, the first being to provide students with the tools they need to succeed, and the other five, supporting that essential goal. We will promote our strongest academic programs and scholarship, invest in research to spur economic growth, enrich the quality of campus life, expand international connections, and build strong civic and community partnerships.
- We must collaborate. More than ever ODU must work in concert with others in the community — with business, industry and government to help our students improve their workplace skills; with community colleges and other universities to make college more accessible to all students. Collaborating with public and private agencies, foundations, corporations, our neighboring cities and communities, and philanthropies will avoid duplication of resources and services. I believe these efforts will shape the solid building blocks of a new economy.

- We must engage. ODU's business and research initiatives contribute nearly $1 billion annually to the economy, making the university the largest generator of new jobs in the region. Our new, transformational ODU Business Gateway establishes an entry point for businesses to the innovative technologies and world-class infrastructure of the university. We hope to establish an endowment to support the study of critical issues in our region. With the largest repository of intellectual capital in Hampton Roads, ODU has the capacity to produce scientific data and informed, solution-based opinion about issues that affect our region. Our new Office of Community Engagement will further the partnership between ODU and the community.

Finally, we must provide our citizens with educational access through distance learning, continuing education and partnerships with community colleges and other universities.

In short, we must be effective and efficient with our resources. Our exemplary faculty and staff have sacrificed salary and benefit increases the past three years. Our endowment has suffered, as donors' portfolios have shrunk. Yet, within the chaos, we have found opportunities to move forward, leaner and more focused than ever.

This annual report is positive testimony that you have been through the fire with us, and for your faith and generosity, we thank you.

Sincerely,

John R. Broderick
President

A MESSAGE FROM THE VICE PRESIDENT

Our country has recently faced crises in both the economy and education. Who can say which came first or which caused the other? Regardless, when crises strike, only those who adjust survive and prosper. Old Dominion University is determined to be among them.

In these austere times, higher education has a dual challenge—to get good students and to keep them. Nontraditional students can access ODU through distance learning, remote sites and continuing education. Financially challenged students can get help from our work-study programs, internships, assistantships and — thanks to support from donors like you — scholarships. Once we get students to ODU, we keep them by giving them the tools they need to succeed.

College should be a life-altering experience through which students acquire higher-level thinking and coping skills, receive multicultural exposure and develop a lifelong appreciation for art, literature, music, history, philosophy and scientific disciplines. But we should also be practical: College must prepare students to work.

ODU is fertile ground for intellectual development. Many faculty members have achieved global reputation in their disciplines; our institutional goals are forward-focused; and, at our university, ideas come together from all sectors of the community. In fact, IDEA FUSION is fast becoming symbolic of ODU, as we open new gateways to campus and invite regional collaboration to solve problems. This stimulating environment inspires creative learning and independent thought. Our new Student Success

Center will help students who have academic deficiencies; our emphasis on undergraduate and graduate student research expands opportunities for high-achieving students; and our new Learning Commons in Perry Library will promote innovative learning for all.

ODU is concentrating on academic programs that have or could attain national prominence — economic forecasting, supply chain management, modeling and simulation, marine sciences, higher education leadership, counseling, STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering and Math) education and nursing, for example. Our new Global Executive MBA Program is an indication of our globally conscious curriculum. Other dual and joint-degree programs with institutions abroad expand student understanding of other cultures. Study abroad, intercultural seminars and events, and interaction with internationally oriented organizations in Hampton Roads, such as NATO, the Virginia Port Authority, Operation Smile and Physicians for Peace, open student minds and create career opportunities.

We are also focusing on disciplines pertinent to our region — oceanography, port operation, engineering, military sciences, lean manufacturing, government and business. When internships or careers open up at some of our regional Fortune 500 companies and major industries, we want ODU students in the pipeline. When those companies need consultants and research, we want them to call ODU, not other universities.

Your support for scholarships and program development remains critical to ODU's success in attracting and keeping students. Strategic planning, prudent use of government funds and philanthropic support will help us maintain our reputation as a dynamic metropolitan research university and help us give our students the tools they need to succeed.

Sincerely,

Alonzo C. Brandon
Vice President
University Advancement

IN MEMORY OF FRANK BATTEN

Old Dominion University and many others lost a great friend when Frank Batten died on Sept. 10, 2009. We were fortunate to have him, a man of global impact, here among us, just across town. His far-reaching influence on ODU will endure in the academic programs he engendered, the research he supported, the students he assisted, and the leadership and service he rendered.

From the institution's earliest days as the Norfolk Division of the College of William and Mary to the present Old Dominion University complex that enrolls nearly 24,000 students, Frank Batten was an integral presence. He not only helped to forge the university's vision and goals, but he also contributed generously to their fulfillment. He gave of his time – serving on the earliest advisory board; becoming the first rector of Old Dominion College; helping to develop the master plan that led to Old Dominion University in 1969; and being a steadfast friend of the university in myriad ways. He gave of his wealth, his name becoming synonymous with progress and excellence at ODU – in the nine-story campus landmark known as the Batten Arts and Letters Building; in the Frank Batten College of Engineering and Technology; in the Batten Award, which recognizes and encourages others who demonstrate outstanding charitable support for the university; and in the largest gift in the university's history, $32 million to endow chairs and support research in engineering and the sciences and to benefit all six of ODU's academic colleges. In fact, despite his busy life as an executive of a major media empire with global reach, Frank Batten never stopped giving to ODU. Old Dominion honored him with both an honorary degree and its highest award, the University Medal.

Batten's support was not exclusive to ODU. He gave abundantly to education at all levels, making the largest gifts in the history of several institutions. Living the adage that charity begins at home, Batten, along with his friend and a former University of Virginia rector, Joshua P. Darden, created the ACCESS College Foundation to help Hampton Roads students pursue higher education.

Broadcast journalist David Brinkley, a contemporary of Batten, described a successful man as "one who can lay a firm foundation with the bricks others have thrown at him." Those who knew Frank Batten best acknowledge that his was not a rags-to-riches story. Rather, he was a privileged man, an heir to a family fortune, who impressed people wherever he went with his passion, talent and modesty. He used the bricks others tossed at him to build a media empire that at one time included the first nationwide, 24-hour cable weather channel, The Weather Channel, and Landmark Media Enterprises, which owned nine daily newspapers, more than 50 weekly newspapers, television stations and a national chain of classified advertising publications. He also served as chair of The Associated Press for five years. Batten used his empire to advance what was right, whether or not it was popular. That ethos was never more boldly displayed than in The Virginian-Pilot's position in favor of integrating Norfolk's schools in 1959. In 1960, the newspaper received a Pulitzer Prize for articles supporting desegregation.

On the day of Frank Batten's death, Earl Swift on PilotOnline.com reminded the community of the Batten legacy. He noted the resolve that characterized all that Batten did, including surviving throat cancer, overcoming the loss of his voice, and persevering through a succession of ailments and injuries.

Pilot President and Publisher Maurice A. Jones, who is also a member of Old Dominion's Educational Foundation board, told the newspaper staff, "Mr. Batten's tenacity, humor, passion, humility and infinite talent have been gifts to us and our company. I pray we will always attempt to emulate the standards by which he lived."

In memory of Frank Batten, Old Dominion University echoes that most eloquent sentiment.

SARAH K. BAKER

Sarah K. Baker '90 came to the United States from Korea when she was 28 years old, with an engagement ring on her finger and undiscovered talents for management, publishing and finance.

With support from her husband, Roger, she has given a substantial bequest to Old Dominion University, which will fund three endowed scholarships when the gift is realized. The endowments are similar in that they will assist students enrolled in the College of Business and Public Administration who meet a minimum GPA requirement. Yet, each endowment has a different focus: one will fund study abroad for a student with financial need; another will help an international student with a focus on community service; and the third will assist a student with a commitment to making a positive impact on an ethnic community.

Baker was inspired to establish these endowments because, as she said in a recent interview, she is "a strong believer that education is the most valuable gift you can give to another human being." She sees Old Dominion's impressive tradition of providing education to a diverse population as a significant asset to the university, encouraging students to broaden their horizons, not just from books and computers, but also from real-life experiences with students from various cultures. The result is enhanced relationships and greater understanding among all.

Baker's own financial difficulties while growing up also inspired her generosity. Unable to go to school until late in life, she envied those who could. Having earned her high school diploma only after arriving in the United States, she understands all too well that students coming from other countries may need support, and she hopes that her story will inspire others to help students achieve their academic goals.

As an undergraduate student at Old Dominion, Baker was a member of the first student ambassador program, which helped with university functions and gave campus tours. At a donor dinner in February 1990, she was seated next to Richard Barry, at that time the president of Landmark Communications, who took an interest in her aspirations, graciously gave her his business card and asked her to call him for an internship opportunity. Very busy with her accounting program and her approaching December graduation, she considered not making that call. Had she not changed her mind a couple of days later, Baker's life might have been very different. As it was, she met with three members of the Landmark senior management group and accepted their offer for a summer internship.

Before her internship ended, Landmark offered her a job as systems manager for human resources and benefits systems. At the same time she was starting this job, she was sitting for her CPA exam, passing all sections on her first attempt. She graduated from ODU with a degree in accounting in December 1990, in just 2 ½ years.

The following 20 years allowed Baker to apply what she learned in school and in life, as she progressed through an array of positions: benefits manager for Landmark Communications in Norfolk in 1992; business manager and then general manager/vice president of the News & Record in Greensboro, N.C., from 1994-2001; publisher of The News-Enterprise in Elizabethtown, Ky., in 2002; publisher of the Carroll County Times in Westminster, Md., in 2004; and her recent position of chief financial officer for The Virginian-Pilot Media Companies in Norfolk in 2007.

Sarah Baker retired in June 2010, coincidentally just a month after Richard Barry retired from Landmark Media Enterprises LLC. She credits Barry and Bruce Bradley, former president of Landmark Publishing Group, for their impact on her career. Both men, who are also good friends of ODU, inspired her to step outside what she described as her “comfort zone” and develop her range of talent.

Baker looks forward to more time with her husband, who is retired from the U.S. Army. She will continue to be busy as a board member of both the ODU Educational Foundation, which she joined in 2009, and the Attucks Theatre Cultural Center, where inner-city youth can participate in art education and performing arts programs.

When Baker met her future husband in Korea, where he was stationed for a year, she couldn’t have imagined that his eventual transfer to Norfolk would bring her to Old Dominion University and The Virginian-Pilot Media Companies.

“You never know what opportunities will come before you and where they will take you,” she said of her successful career. Because Sarah Baker’s incredible journey included an education at ODU, the university has been richly rewarded, and other young women will have the path toward opportunity cleared for them.

STEPHEN B. BALLARD

A familiar sight on the Old Dominion University campus the past several years has been the S.B. Ballard Construction Co. signs. They have been everywhere – Ted Constant Convocation Center, University Village Apartments, Powhatan Sports Complex, Student Recreation Center, wrestling addition to the Jim Jarrett Athletic Administration Building, Ainslie Football Complex and adjoining parking garage, Alcaraz-Weinstein Plaza and Foreman Field.

The partnership between Steve Ballard and ODU began in the 1970s when he attended the university for a year before leaving for a business opportunity. That time clearly made a lasting impression on him, as he is now a major donor to the university with recent gifts of more than $2.5 million.

S.B. Ballard Construction Co., which he founded in 1978, has become a major force in the industry, amassing an extensive list of clients throughout the mid-Atlantic and southeastern regions of the United States and receiving national awards for job safety and performance. In addition to providing excellent, highly visible construction services to ODU, Ballard has been an avid supporter in many other ways. He joined the university's Educational Foundation board in 1998 and has served in such leadership roles as treasurer, chair of the Finance and Audit Committee and member of the Executive Committee. He has also been a long-time Big Blue Club member and men's and women's basketball season ticket holder. In 2004, the university bestowed upon him an honorary alumni award.

One of Ballard's biggest projects at ODU was the football facility, which was renamed Foreman Field at S.B. Ballard Stadium in July 2009, in recognition of the generous donations that he and his wife, B.J., have made to the university. "Old Dominion University has grown in leaps and bounds over the past decade, both physically and in reputation, to become a nationally recognized university," says Ballard. "Several years ago, my wife, B.J., and I decided that we wanted to do something for the community and we think that Monarch football will bring lots of good things to the entire Tidewater region. It's great to have the Ballard name associated with that success."

Foreman Field was built in 1936 at a cost of $300,000, with state and federal funds provided during the Great Depression. It was named after Norfolk attorney A.H. Foreman, a member of William and Mary's board of visitors and one of the founders of the Norfolk Division of William and Mary, which later became Old Dominion University. Built as the home of the Norfolk Division football program, it found new life as a venue for other college and community sports programs when football was dropped in 1941.

Foreman Field's $24.8 million renovation was completed by S.B. Ballard Construction Co. and Clark Nexsen Architecture & Engineering in time for the 2009 football season. The renovation included a new state-of-the-art game-day building, field surface, scoreboard, sound system, field enclosure and a contiguous parking garage. The Ainslie Football Complex features 26 luxury suites, including Ballard's own uniquely designed suite, and 390 loge seats in 100 mini boxes, in addition to recruiting and hospitality facilities and locker rooms for Monarch student-athletes and coaches. Twelve of the suites have their own patios overlooking the plaza south of the complex, while the loge seating area includes an 8,000 square-foot covered patio on the second level of the facility. Another 7,500 square-foot enclosed terrace looks directly out over the south end zone. The playing surface at Foreman Field was replaced by Astroturf GameDay Grass 3D.

"I just like seeing all the young kids playing with such joy and rooting with such passion," Ballard says, reflecting on the transformation of the football facility. "I've seen the university change so much in the past 10 years. There's so much more at ODU for those kids now."

The Old Dominion football program kicked off its first season of NCAA Division I Football Championship Subdivision play on Sept. 5, 2009. The Monarchs ended their season with a record-breaking 9-2 slate. We think that is exactly the kind of success and joy Steve and B.J. Ballard expected to see when they added their name to the stadium.

FRAIM BROTHERS

Say the name Fraim and Old Dominion University athletics in the same breath, and you get a puzzled stare. Which Fraim? Dick or Ed? Both Richard “Dick” A. Fraim and his brother, Edward J. Fraim, have been such an integral part of ODU over the past decades that anybody remotely interested in intercollegiate athletics knows both names.

Dick has been a dedicated Monarch for five decades. He graduated from Old Dominion College in 1965 with a Bachelor of Science degree in psychology and interests in communications and journalism. One of his friends who worked at WTAR, a local A.M. radio station, invited him to try traffic reporting while he waited to start basic training with the Army National Guard. Yes, Dick was the guy in the helicopter! He hoped this entry into radio would be a step in the direction of his real passion – sports broadcasting.

After basic training, he joined Landmark Communications Inc. in Norfolk in 1966, working back at WTAR. In 1970, ODU athletic director Jim Jarrett recruited Dick as the “Voice of the Monarchs,” and Dick’s passion for sports reporting was realized. For the next eight years, he did play-by-play broadcasts of ODU basketball on WTAR, giving up that role in 1978 to become the station’s general manager and hiring Bob Rathbun, later the voice of the Detroit Tigers and Atlanta Hawks, as his successor.

In 1983, Landmark sent Dick to San Jose, Calif., where he became the general manager of KNTV, the area’s ABC-TV affiliate, and, later, to Las Vegas, where he was the general manager of KLAS, a CBS affiliate.

Dick was invited onto the ODU Intercollegiate Foundation board when he was in his early 30s, and by age 35, had become its president. He remained on the board until the mid ’80s, serving some of that time from San Jose. When he first joined the foundation, only eight or nine people were giving large donations. With his passion exceeding his age and income, he assured the board that he would eventually donate, and he encouraged others to help until then. He made good on his promise upon his retirement from Landmark Communications in 2004. The company and its president, Frank Batten Jr., gave ODU $25,000 in his honor, and Dick added the $225,000 needed to establish and fully endow the Richard A. Fraim Men's Basketball Endowed Scholarship.

While Dick was making his mark on ODU athletics, his brother Ed was doing an equally amazing job for ODU in athletic fundraising, a role he played for 32 years before retiring in 2009. Ed had graduated from ODU in 1964 with, like Dick, a bachelor's degree in psychology. By 1977, he had begun his career as the university's first athletic fundraiser and first executive director of the Intercollegiate Foundation. Prior to 1977, annual contributions to the foundation totaled $37,000; in Ed's first two years, this amount increased nearly sevenfold, and during his tenure he was responsible for raising millions of dollars for athletic scholarships, salaries and facilities.

When Ed announced his retirement date, his tightly knit group of friends, led by Pete Keilty and including Rick Kiefner, Jean Seibert and Carroll Creecy, as well as his brother Dick and other family members, came together to establish an athletic scholarship in his name. It was only a matter of weeks before they were assured of reaching the $250,000 level to fully endow a scholarship. Dick himself pledged $25,000 to the endowment. This award, which honors Ed for a job well done, will support a student-athlete who demonstrates outstanding leadership and/or academic standing.

Less than one year after Ed's departure, Jim Jarrett announced his retirement date for June 2010, after 43 years with Old Dominion. Once again, Dick came to the table with a pledge of $25,000, this time to help endow the Dr. James Jarrett Endowed Athletic Scholarship.

Dick Fraim beams when he speaks of the student-athletes he has helped financially and whose personal academic and athletic journeys he has followed. But his generosity extends far beyond the scholarship recipients; it also helps free other funds for recruiting, building or renovating facilities, and traveling.

Considering the legacy of both Dick and Ed Fraim, even if you were to mix them up in your conversation about ODU athletics, you wouldn't be far off the mark. Each in his own way has made immeasurable contributions to the success of Old Dominion and its student-athletes.

THE FOUNDATIONS 2000-2009

The ODU Foundations have experienced many changes during the turbulent first decade of this century. At the end of 2000, ODU's total endowment value was $75.4 million. That value ballooned to an all-time high of $183 million in 2008, before plunging to $126 million in February 2009, following the disastrous economy of 2008. As you will see on page 39 of this report, the value rebounded to $144.8 million in 2009. We are proud of the success and resilience of our foundations and would like to share a few highlights from the past decade.

The annual Educational Foundation scholarship luncheon is named for Hugh L. Vaughan as a tribute to his vision and generosity.

A 1931 graduate of the College of William and Mary, Hugh L. Vaughan had financed his own way through college. Years later, the untimely death of his eldest daughter, Patricia Vaughan-Myers, a 1961 graduate of Old Dominion, inspired him to establish a scholarship in her memory. Because of his lifelong commitment to education and his native Norfolk, he selected ODU as the major beneficiary of his philanthropy.

Late in his life, Vaughan received a handwritten note of thanks from an ODU scholarship recipient. Deeply touched by this gesture, Hugh said it was the best possible reminder that all his years of hard work had been worth it and that another young person – in an era quite different from his own – possessed the humility, generosity of spirit and imagination to reach out and say “thank you.” This letter validated Vaughan's belief in the power of an individual to make a difference and move society forward.

ODU President Emeritus James V. Koch develops the Center for Regional Studies Quasi-Endowment.

Funded by leaders of the Hampton Roads community, this endowment supports the State of the Region report, an annual publication that features surveys and studies about topics such as the economy, transportation, government and the military.

The university's second capital campaign, Changing Lives: The Campaign for Old Dominion University, kicks off with a $100 million goal.

Funds were raised through the campaign to promote research, renovate educational facilities and establish professorships and endowed scholarships.

Theodore F. Constant gifts ODU with $5 million to build the Ted Constant Convocation Center.

Constant's leadership gift was one of the largest to date in the university's history. The Ted, as the center is now affectionately known, became the cornerstone of the University Village project, a development that transformed the campus and the student experience.

The University Village springs up with expansion of the campus across Hampton Boulevard.

Over the next few years, the streets and blocks were filled with the University Village Apartments for students, retail shops and restaurants, the relocated ODU Foundation offices above the new University Village Bookstore, the Baron and Ellin Gordon Art Galleries, the Marriott SpringHill Suites hotel, two parking garages, and Innovation Research Park @ ODU - I and II .

The Research Vessel Fay Slover is officially christened.

The ODU Educational Foundation contracted for the building of the state-of-the-art research vessel, which was named after the late wife of Col. Samuel. L Slover, founder of The Virginian-Pilot. The vessel's advanced technology and seaworthy capabilities fostered research far more sophisticated than had ever been possible at ODU, yielding results in half the time. The vessel continues to operate in the Chesapeake Bay, in estuaries and on the continental shelf.

Frank Batten's gift of $32 million is the largest in university history.

The Batten gift endowed chairs in all six of ODU's academic colleges and supported research in engineering and the sciences. Batten said, "I hope this gift will enable Old Dominion to reach the forefront of academic and research eminence, particularly in the fields of science and technology."

ODU announces the largest planned gift in the history of the university.

Robert M. Stanton '61, prominent Hampton Roads real estate developer, designated the College of Business and Public Administration to receive his gift of $1.5 million. Stanton is a former ODU Board of Visitors rector, a founding member of the ODU Real Estate Foundation board and its first chair. This gift, which follows establishment in 2003 of the Robert M. Stanton Chair in Real Estate and Economic Development, reflects Stanton's keen awareness of the potential for development through funding to the college.

The Barry M. Kornblau Alumni Center opens.

After a significant facelift, the former public safety building became the Barry M. Kornblau Alumni Center. Kornblau's generosity has had substantial impact on both academics and athletics at the university. He has further committed to ODU by serving on the Board of Visitors, the boards of the Educational and Intercollegiate Foundations and the Alumni Association board.

THE FOUNDATIONS

2005

The Educational Foundation celebrates its 50th anniversary.

On April 15, 1955, the Educational Foundation for the Norfolk Division of the College of William and Mary signed its charter. The foundation responded to the call for all Commonwealth-aided colleges and universities to incorporate nonprofit affiliates to distinguish public-sector funds from gifts. Authorized to receive, administer and distribute funds and property of all kinds, the foundation raised nearly $100,000 in its first year to establish a library at the Norfolk Division.

Frank Reidy announces a $2 million gift.

Frank Reidy continued his generosity to the university with a gift to establish the Frank Reidy Research Center for Bioelectrics, a collaboration between Old Dominion and Eastern Virginia Medical School. The center recruits and retains top faculty and graduate researchers and provides seed money for cutting-edge research and development.

The Arthur and Phyllis Kaplan Orchid Conservatory is established.

Dr. Arthur S. Kaplan donated nearly 1,000 of his prized orchids to Old Dominion. His brother, Leonard Kaplan, donated $1 million toward the $2.1 million for the construction of a greenhouse/conservatory to house the plants. Other donors joined in support of the construction, botanical research, and care of the orchid collection, the largest in Hampton Roads.

E.V. Williams includes ODU as a beneficiary in his will.

In 1940, E.V. Williams founded the E.V. Williams Co. Inc., a major road construction company. At his death in 2003, ODU learned that we were a beneficiary in his will. In 2005, the university began receiving the magnanimous gifts which, by 2009, totaled $11.1 million. The funds have endowed chairs, faculty development, and the E.V. Williams Center for Real Estate and Economic Development in the College of Business and Public Administration. The E.V. Williams General Endowment supports athletic programming. Also, the E.V. Williams Engineering and Computational Sciences building is the first university building in Virginia to win Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) certification for meeting standards set by the U.S. Green Building Council.

The Folkes-Stevens Indoor Tennis Center opens.

Local tennis enthusiasts Grey and Amy Folkes and Judy and Ricky Stevens donated $1 million toward the construction of Old Dominion's first indoor tennis facility, one of the top collegiate tennis facilities in the country.

The Alcaraz-Weinstein Family Plaza opens.

Gary and Bernadette Alcaraz and Lee and Dena Weinstein jointly donated $500,000 to the Intercollegiate Foundation to construct and name the Alcaraz-Weinstein Family Plaza, adjacent to Foreman Field at S.B. Ballard Stadium. The plaza is the entrance for the Monarch football team and fans.

Opening ceremonies are held for Innovation Research Park @ ODU.

Located in the University Village, this building represents a unique public-private partnership between the ODU Real Estate Foundation and a developer. The building was designed to merge university intellectual capital, faculty and students with private-sector companies to pursue research, technology development and business-creation opportunities. A second, adjacent building, which opened in the research park in 2010, furthers those goals.

The Foundation House welcomes its first residents.

The Virginia Business and Professional Women's Foundation gave $499,000 to the ODU Educational Foundation to build the Foundation House and an additional $50,000 to furnish it. The house provides a unique cooperative-living option for academically talented ODU female students.

The Ainslie Football Complex is named for Jeffrey W. Ainslie.

The Ainslie Football Complex, which overlooks Foreman Field at S.B. Ballard Stadium, was named for Jeffrey Ainslie, a 1983 graduate of ODU, following his $1 million gift to the Intercollegiate Foundation. The complex houses concessions and suites.

2009

The S.B. Ballard Construction Co., continues to change the face of ODU, one building at a time.

Steve Ballard, owner of the company, is responsible for the construction and renovation of many of ODU's most visible and esteemed buildings – the Ted Constant Convocation Center, University Village Apartments, Powhatan Sports Complex, Student Recreation Center, Ainslie Football Complex, Alcaraz-Weinstein Family Plaza, and Foreman Field at S.B. Ballard Stadium. Ballard's personal gift of $2.5 million also reflects his commitment to the university.

HERITAGE SOCIETY

to join the Heritage Society at Old Dominion University. Heritage Society membership is bestowed upon alumni and friends who have designated ODU as a recipient of their estate or other planned gifts. Outstanding public universities are built as the result of continuing generous private support. Gifts from the Heritage Society provide a permanent source of funding for academic and athletic scholarships, professorships and building projects. Bequests, including annuities, stocks and other appreciated assets, may be used for membership. If you would like to support the university through a planned gift and create a lasting legacy, please contact the Office of Development at 757.683.3090.

ODU EDUCATIONAL FOUNDATION

On April 14, 1955, the charter was signed for the College of William and Mary, Norfolk Division, Educational Foundation. At the first meeting of the trustees in November 1955, the board presented and adopted bylaws, adopted the foundation seal, and elected trustees and officers. These actions formally established the foundation to receive, administer and distribute funds and property of all kinds, exclusively to further the educational activities and objectives of the college. On Nov. 5, 1962, the Old Dominion College Educational Foundation expanded its goals to include raising funds for faculty salary supplements and for the library. Since its charter was signed, the Educational Foundation has continued to broaden its support to the university.

ODU REAL ESTATE FOUNDATION

The Real Estate Foundation was formed to receive, acquire and manage gifts of real property for the benefit of the university. Governed by a board of trustees, the foundation currently manages a number of properties near the Norfolk campus and the Virginia Beach Higher Education Center. The foundation continues to develop the University Village.

Endowment spendable funds and annual gifts transferred to support programs, scholarships and professorships.

Calendar year 2009 marked a time of rebuilding for the endowment fund. As the U.S. economy showed signs of recovery, the endowment's performance improved as well. Overall for the year, the endowment fund had an 11 percent positive return. As a result, at year-end, the total market value of the fund was $145 million, up from $129 million the previous year. Though the value is still down from a peak of $183 million in May of 2008, we are buoyed by this year's strong performance and the foundations' consistent level of support to the university.

The foundation's policy calculates spending based on Sept. 30 market values. After the significant drop in market values in October 2008, the foundations' boards and staff worked with university officials to develop plans for lessening the impact of this downturn on available funding to Old Dominion. After implementing those plans and strategies, the foundations were able to maintain a consistent level of funding support to the university. In the short term, the foundations' board and staff will continue to anticipate or respond tactically to current market conditions. The Foundations' Investment Committee is looking strategically at our endowment model, which, over the long term, should maximize the endowment's value to ensure that future generations of Old Dominion students and faculty have equal or greater support relative to today. With continued patience, prudence and help from donors like you, we will meet that goal.
